Dangerous goods are substances or articles with hazardous properties which may, if handled incorrectly, explode, asphyxiate (choke), burn, make explosive mixtures, poison, eat skin or metal, pollute the environment or become unstable if mixed with other products.

For ease of identification of dangerous goods, the international community has created a classification system. All dangerous goods are included in one of nine primary classes. In some cases, it has also been necessary to sub-divide some of the classes into divisions in order to adequately provide articulations for the dangers of the individual goods.
